3. What it means (analysis: FyndMyAI commentary, not measured data)

- Human approval is now a selling point for agents that act. 13 of this window's 120 launches say they hold a send, spend, publish or purchase until a person approves it: MausBot, Xiryn, Pancake, Okou, StellarFirm, Backdrop, Afterparty, Atticus, InboxPilot, Leveld, Amplify AI, Fraya and WEXTL. For buyers, an approval step is becoming a baseline expectation rather than a differentiator.
- Agents are moving onto the user's own machine. 15 launches are open source and 12 say they run locally or self-hosted (for example Xiryn, AirJelly, Atticus, Eney from MacPaw, BetterWispr and NoteOwl). Ghost Core goes further and sells a $3,499 on-device AI computer (import). 5 agents ask you to bring your own model key. This helps explain the jump in fully free listings from 4% to 16%.
- Tools for coding agents, not coders. 9 launches are built around coding agents: Lispa, Reason, OpenCode, Miko, HeyDeer, Retasc, Kynage Cockpit, Nuclr Commander and Skyelight. Retasc and Kynage are coordination layers (task leasing, a shared ticket desk), which points to teams running several agents at once.

- Pricing per agent, not per person, is appearing. Backdrop charges $100/mo per coworker, GBrain $199/mo per workspace with $100 of model credit included (live page also lists a $19/mo Tools plan), Brev $250/mo per organisation with $100 in starting credits, and Pancake $99/mo per workspace (all ✓ verified).
- Media volume is still credit-driven and template-heavy. 21 of 34 media launches describe credit allowances. Two more "Hotel Lobby" duet-video sites arrived (AI Migos Video, HotelLobbySi.app), on top of last week's four, alongside Bulin AI's fixed-template clips. As last week, discount media volume when sizing the category.

4. Watchlist: "AI-search visibility" (Analyst tier), first week-over-week check
